Un LOTS OF COFFEE

Just last week we had three French visitors from Rennes: Yannick, Fred and Elodie, who are part of the French campus team. Their goal was to encourage us and lend a hand; they succeeded in both! We had a dinner together with our involved Christian students. Everyone was able to share how they began their relationship with God and how it's changed their lives. Then we had a day full of appointments with spiritually thirsty contacts. The time was filled with espresso and spiritual conversation. One of our principle goals was to show these students enthusiastic French Christians! It's important for them to see that sharing Christ isn't simply for American missionaries, but every Christian.

theme of the Bible. "You were at the planning meeting for this weren't you?" Bertrand said as he turned to Dan. Bertrand is French, but he teaches American history (in English) to students at Mirail University. Having lived many years in the States, he is very concerned about French-American relations. At the end of the conversation Bertrand offered, "Maybe you could come and speak to my class some time." For more than a year, that's exactly what we have been hoping – to partner with English professors to give us more natural inroads with French students. Dan is meeting Bertrand and some of his colleagues for lunch this week!

Deux BEING PROACTIVE

Last month marked a pause in our discussion soirées. We simply didn't have enough non-Christians coming, so we shifted gears and tried taking a more proactive stance in this spiritual battle. This meant going on prayer walks with our Christian students. We claimed spiritual territory as we walked on their campuses, and took a non-threatening step towards sharing their faith. Indeed, if you're actively praying that the people around you will know Jesus, it shouldn't be long before the Lord opens doors for you to share with them. This is an incredible challenge for the French, because being a Christian is way out beyond left field. No doubt people listening to Jesus wondered what He was talking about when He said, "You must take up your cross each day and follow me."

Quatre THE JOURNEY

Our application to continue working as fulltime staff with Campus Crusade has been mailed. We noted that we'd like to work with the Western European office to serve the campus ministry. That means our return to the U.S. in June could be yet another transition. The Lord is still guiding us along in this journey, nothing is certain but His faithfulness!

Please pray...

- For Dan's contact with Bertrand and other English professors, that future teams can speak to English classes.
- For three Stinters from Aix-en-Provence as they visit Toulouse next week to help with our Easter outreaches.
- That we wrap up administrative details for the summer project team arriving in May, especially lodging.

The Lord's blessings to you!
