Un THINKING ABOUT COST

Don't most of us as parents want our kids to experience the same joys we had as children? Let's get nostalgic about childhood. We can easily imagine taking Silas and Efrem to their first little league game, easing them down the slopes of Red Lodge mountain on a cute pair of skis, dipping Grandma's homemade chocolate chip cookies in milk and helping Grandpa turn the ice cream maker. Yet following God's call overseas will rob them and us of realizing much of that. It's tough to think they might not even have little league baseball. And grandparent's hugs will be far far away. It's healthy for us to remember the effect our decisions will have on our kids (and their grandparents).

Ready for swimming!

you feels like a foreigner. You've traveled to more countries than your age, you speak multiple languages fluently, but can't really spell in any. You've experienced much, have enormous perspective, yet feel out of step with your own culture. You don't have the same root structure as anyone around you. In some sense you feel like a "hidden immigrant". You are a third culture kid.

They develop a sense of identity with both cultures while not having full ownership in any.* Imagine coming home on furlough with your parents. Someone in church Sunday morning shakes your hand and asks you where you're from. How do you answer? You've lived most of your life in Germany, but your extended family lives in the U.S. Part of you feels very American yet you feel less comfortable here. Your house is in Germany but people keep asking you if you are glad to be "home". Your sense of home is fuzzy. You look like everyone around you, you talk like everyone around you, but something inside of Please pray...

- for safe travel home from Colorado.
- that we quickly regain our momentum in finding our team of supporters (we're at 84%!)
- that we find significant special gifts to meet our 1-time needs.
