un JUST ANOTHER FRIDAY NIGHT

It's 7:30 in the evening. The traditional Friday homemade pizza is out of the oven and cooling on the counter. The table is set, and May sits with her laptop open, working. The project is significant, creating a new database for Cru to manage the many internet domains they "own" around the world, for example cru.org or agapefrance.org. France alone has 82 domain names, and that's just one country. For security purposes, for technical support, and for recognizing trusted email domains, it is important to keep all of this in order. So why does it take priority over Friday night pizza? There is an urgent issue to work through, her colleagues in Singapore are sleeping, but her teammate in the States is still in the game. So May is doing her best to unblock the situation for him to keep the ball rolling. Aside from the immense scope of the work, time zones are one of the biggest challenges when working on a global team. May thrives on challenges like this.

deux THE LATEST

Last week Efrem left for Paris where he and Silas are sharing an apartment. We're thankful he was able to find 100% of the support he needs to begin working with Crescendo. Silas is also doing well, about to submit his second article on process mining for his doctorate. In Rennes, our staff team kicked off this school year with an outing on the beach near Cancale. If everyone were to show up there would be 27 of us! There are two moms expecting babies to be born in the near future, a new intern who is working one day a week with my creative team, and a woman currently raising support to take on communications at a national level. The weather was perfect and the view across the bay of Mont Saint Michel was special. Our next team meeting, this week, is working together to deep clean the office and ministry space, hooray!
